교과개요

This course aims for a broad understanding on the topics in ecology and evolutionary biology, the two pillars of macrobiology. First half of the semester will be allotted to ecology, which concerns biological processes occurring at relatively short time scale. Ecological processes that occur at the levels of individuals, populations, communities, and ecosystems, such as interactions among individuals, dynamics of competition and distribution of individuals over various geographic scales, and ecological succession will be taught and discussed. In the second half of the semester, we will learn the mechanisms of evolution of organisms. Topics such as natural and sexual selection, evolution of life history, social evolution and altruism, and speciation will be taught and discussed. In addition to the classical textbook topics, more timely issues such as the impact of climate change and merits and demerits of reductionism in understanding evolution will be handled by special lectures and/or group discussion.

교과목표

Through the exposure to the various concepts and topics in ecology and evolution, students will be able to develop balanced view on life. Finally their pains-taking effort of learning the molecular and cellular aspects of life will start having a greater meaning.
